

Blog Copy – 5: Powerlifting

Title

Powerlifting

Intro

For centuries, people have been fascinated with testing the limits of their bodies, especially when it comes to physical strength.

The sport of powerlifting has roots dating back to ancient Greek and Roman strength training traditions. Modern powerlifting developed in the United Kingdom and the United States during the 1950s.

An earlier form of the sport, known as “odd lifts,” included a wider variety of movements, but today powerlifting focuses on three primary lifts:

- squat
- bench press
- deadlift

In competition, athletes are given three attempts to achieve their maximum weight for each lift.

Types of Powerlifting

There are two main types of powerlifting:

Equipped Powerlifting

- Uses supportive gear such as suits, shirts, or knee wraps
- Equipment helps store elastic energy and assist in lifting

Raw (Un-Equipped) Powerlifting

- No supportive gear is used
- Relies entirely on the athlete’s natural strength

Both forms follow the same fundamental structure but differ in how assistance is provided during lifts.

Benefits and Safety

Powerlifting may seem intimidating, but when done properly, it is a safe and highly rewarding sport.

Benefits include:

- increased physical strength
- improved mental focus and discipline
- lower injury rates compared to many sports

In fact, sports like basketball and soccer often have higher injury rates than properly supervised powerlifting.

Another advantage is longevity:

- many athletes peak in their mid-30s to 40s
 - longer competitive lifespan compared to other sports
-

Getting Started

For beginners interested in powerlifting, working with a qualified personal trainer is strongly recommended.

A good trainer will:

- teach proper form
- ensure safety
- create a personalized training plan
- help you progress effectively

While a trainer will push you to improve, they will always prioritize safety and long-term success.

(Optional CTA Insight for Figma)

This one supports:

- authority in strength training
- SEO for powerlifting + Greenville
- trainer credibility

👉 CTA should feel more like:

- “Train with a strength coach”
- less aggressive than weight loss article